A short synopsis of the content of the talk:

The violent death of defeated rebel Jonker van Manipa (c. 1630-1689) at Batavia (present-day Jakarta on Java, Indonesia) and the public display of his butchered and impaled head mark the end of the Jonker Rebellion. Long-time intrepid collaborator and commander of the VOC's Pribumi or inlander ('indigenous' / 'sons of the soil') soldiers stationed at Batavia, he was accused of conspiracy with his followers. Mansell will spotlight the lesser-known intricacies of this infamous uprising and its surprising impact on the Dutch-occupied Cape of Good Hope.

More about the speaker:

Mansell George Upham is a researcher, writer, historian and jurist specialising in South African colonial history. Born in Welkom, Free State, he grew up on the East Rand, Cahora Bassa (Mozambique), North West, and the Western Cape. He read French and English (Stellenbosch). Thereafter he graduated in Law and was admitted and authorised to practise and to be enrolled as advocate of the High Court of South Africa. He represented South Africa as diplomat in Tokyo, Japan. A champion of indigenous rights and Khoe / Bushmen renaissance, he spearheaded the campaign to repatriate the then unburied Saartje Baartman becoming legal advisor and representative in South Africa and the UN (Geneva) for the Griqua National Conference of SA and other Khoe / Bushmen representative groups. He also
